Homework

It is expected of students in the Central Kitsap Schools that a certain amount of preparation and studying will be necessary outside of class time for each academic course. Very little, if any, will be expected of primary and lower elementary students. As a student progresses through the school, the amount of such preparation will normally increase. This would reach a maximum in the high school of possibly three hours a week of preparation outside of class for an academic course and in no case would it exceed five hours per week for the average student. This will vary by students. Usually the best students are those who spend the most time in outside preparation. The staff under the leadership of the principal in each building should work toward a consistent pattern in the amount of outside preparation the students will need.
